► ScanMyPC is a small and lightweight application for downloading photos from your screen and saving them to your hard disk. This is a handy tool for screen shot capturing, especially when you don't have a camera nearby, are waiting for something in the Internet or are on a mobile phone or tablet and need to take a picture of something presented on the screen. Screeny comes with a useful, well-documented Help file that provides detailed instructions on how to use it effectively. It's easy to install. In fact, the application asks you to sign in to your MSDN account when it starts, simply to test compatibility. Supporting all popular video, audio and webcam formats After an initial installation process, you're ready to start your screen capture session. Press the Start Scan button to select an image or video to be saved on your hard drive. You can capture the entire screen or focus on a particular window (or a range of them). If you're capturing a web page, you can choose to download the entire website and save it directly to your computer, or get the HTML files by clicking the Download link. Screeny is a small, simple yet powerful application for saving screenshots of the currently displayed screen. [For more information about how to use Screeny, please refer to the Help file included in the downloaded package] The application has few default options that you can modify, including how many captures to make and their compression quality. If you want, you can edit the captured images, crop them or save them with a specific file format. Screeny comes with no extra features, but it runs smoothly and has no compatibility issues in our tests. VideNurse is a tool that allows you to capture several videos from webcam, audio, devices or the screen. VideNurse runs through a wizard to detect video and audio streams, as well as webcam streams. There are two basic options. Monitor a particular video stream: VideNurse shows you a list of any active devices (webcams, computer speakers, sound cards, microphones, etc.) to choose from, or you can select a video stream displayed on your webcam, computer speakers or video devices. Capture an audio and video stream: When you select this option, you will be asked to choose a video stream and an audio stream that you want to record. If you are capturing videos from a webcam, you can choose between recording a video and an audio stream at the same time. If you
